ATLANTA; GA.

MONDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 16.

THE SITUATION IN MISSISSIPPI. The late movement of the enemy in Mississippl, whether regarded as a military enterprise, a strategie policy, or a coup de guerra, is carainly the most extraordinary of the war. For an army of thirty or forty thousand men to cut itself loose from its base, like a balloon from its moorings, and plunge into the depths of an unexplored country, confronting the hazards not only of resistance but of exhaustion and starvation, is a mark of boldness, not to say of extrome reckleseness, and is but an additional avidence of the extremities to which the enemy is driven in order that an end may be accomplished or a point carried.

There can scarcely be a doubt, we pregume, with but few obstacles to oppose his advance. The main body deflecting to the right, and tak-His movements have been so rapid and second log the direction of Mobile, the other column

We are loth to believe that the enemy is so reckless as to project an overland expedition from Vicksburg against Mobile, at this season of the year. Their policy hitherto has been to advance by gradual approaches, and so we think it will be in this instance. The distance to travel, the dangers to hanard, and the obstacles to be overcome, are too many and great to justify such a belief. But a few days at most will develops the plans and purposes of the for, when we shall be enabled to pass a more correct judgment upon his conduct.
